

Every deer hunter envisions the possibility of seeing a truly giant buck. But only a few manage to be in the right spot when fate delivers that rare moment.

Illinois Big Bucks

arms and spreading hands by firelight, telling stories too incredible to be true.

Yet some of the stories are true. And here is proof. Each year the Department of Natural Resources compiles a list of the biggest whitetail racks tagged in the Prairie State. The Big Buck Recognition Program honors thousands of deer annually. Qualifying deer taken by firearm and archery hunters are scored by certified measurers, with standards set by the Boone and Crockett Club. To qualify, deer taken by firearm must reach a minimum score of 140 for a typical rack and 160 for a nontypical rack. For archery hunters, including crossbow hunters, the minimum score is 115 for typical and 130 for nontypical antlers.

Antlers must dry for at least 60 days before being scored officially. For a list of measurers visit www.dnr.state.il.us/events. Call (217) 785-5091 for more information on the Big Buck Recognition Program.

The following records are for deer submitted during 2004.

For as long as there have been deer hunters, there's been the classic deer hunting story.

Hunting is older than the written word, older than nearly anything else we do today. It's only natural, therefore, that the ritual of heading to the woods for venison—then telling and retelling that story—survives as it does today. In Illinois, perhaps the finest state in America for incredible whitetails, amazing deer stories come from everywhere. Wherever there are deer hunters (more than 200,000 hit the woods in Illinois last year), tales of monstrous bucks and unfathomable antlers drift across campfires, the fortunate ones raising
